Scheduled For Pavement Milling

by Theresa Magario

the garbage trucks go lurching by with all the sound and stinking effect of elephants being driven by a whip cracking muscled persian warlord i hear what could be pterodactyls circling over ten eyck & union but nothing is ever seen of their paranoia shadows on the ground so no one scuttles and huddles to the parked car boulders fridays have the air-raid pouring out into the sunset it's stand-to:
grab your shotguns. zombies are at the walls of brooklyn. again. when rain falls graffiti scrawl glows at you from the brick and concrete those runes have their strongest influence when the east river is high i read this to my boyfriend who lived in brooklyn on and off for many years, letting him know in advance it's not shitty poetry, although i hope he trusts my judgement of this by this point. he said 'dammmmmmmmmmmmmmn. that is good.'
